LARGEST DEPOT IN WORLD.

Passenger and Freight, Planned for Chicago.

A $40,000,000 union railroad station, combining both passenger and freight facilities and equipped to make it the greatest structure of its kind in the world, is soon to become a reality in Chicago.

Plans for the station, prepared by the special committee of the city council, led by Alderman Thomas J. Dixon, have already been approved by eighteen of the twenty-two railroads having terminals in Chicago. The four which still hold out are the Illinois Central, Northwestern, and Pennsylvania and Great Western railroads. However, it is believed that these lines will soon give their consent. The station is to cover the area between Harrison and Twenty-second street and extend from State west to the river. The cost of the property and the expenditure incurred in building will aggregate more than $40,000,000, all of which will be borne by the roads. Not only will it be the heaviest outlay ever made in Chicago for such a purpose, but it will centralize all lines, combining both passenger and freight terminals and will abolish all the existing stations, the suburban service of the Illinois Central road being the only one that will probably be left out.

ANTHRAX IS CHECKED.

Danger of Epidemic Among Cattle Near Lake Zurich Is Slight.

Members of the live stock commission believe they have checked the danger of an epidemic from anthrax among the cattle of Lake Zurich. The farms of men who are believed to have infected cattle have been quarantined and the method of exterminating the disease has been assigned to Floyd Gibbs, a veterinary surgeon. Henry Derthorn and Joseph Kitson, who were infected in taking care of the sick cattle, are in an improved condition and it is thought their recovery is the question of only a short time.

In Lake County, twenty-one animals have died and a large number are sick.
The State Board of live stock commissioners today established a quarantine against every herd where the disease has appeared.
It is believed by the commissioners that the disease resulted from the dumping of refuse from a tannery into a railroad cut near the point where the first case developed.

LAKE VILLA MAN IN TOILS.

Pleads Guilty to Robbing Depot in Kenosha County.

The railway station of the Wisconsin
Central at New Munster, Kenosha county, was entered Tuesday night. The cash drawer in the office was broken open with a sledge hammer and $30 taken. Wednesday John Jacket, a Polish resident of Lake Villa, was arrested on the charge of burglary and pleaded guilty in Kenosha county court.

One Solitary Woman.

A woman has been arrested in Denver on the charge of fraudulent voting. The despatches say it is the first case on record.
Women have been voting in Colorado for eight years. In Kansas for fourteen, in Idaho and Utah for five, and in Wyoming for thirty-two. If during this time only one woman has been charged with fraudulent voting, it is a pretty good record.

A great many men in Denver are charged with having voted fraudulently at the same election; 201 men are under indictment for election frauds in St. Louis alone;
while at a recent election in Philadelphia
the number of fraudulent votes cast is said to have amounted up into the thousands.
There is hardly a large city in which more or less illegal voting does not go on. This is not regarded by anyone as a proof of the unfitness of all men to vote; but no sooner is one solitary woman charged with illegal voting than the fact is telegraphed from one end of the country to the other, and quoted seriously as a reason why all women should be debarred from the ballot box.

Secretary of the Navy Long says he has never yet heard an argument against woman suffrage that was not an insult to the intelligence of a ten-year-old boy.

Certainly this particular objection would come under that head.

THE COLLEGE OF COMMERCE.

A Kenosha County School That Has Stood the Test. New Building Ready September 1st.

Young people who are beginning to ask the question, "What school?" will be interested in the success achieved by the Kenosha College of Commerce and English training school. Established eight years ago the school has grown from a beginning of four students to the respectful enrolment of one hundred and twenty-five a year.

For the past seven years the College has been located in the Court House, but as this was needed for the County officers, Mr.
Trenary, the principle, purchased the corner just north, and has now almost completed a fine two-story brick building to be used exclusively by the school. The new building, occupying 6,000 square feet of floor surface, will be a model of its kind, with perfect heat, light and ventilation.

On the first floor are Principal's office, library, shorthand department, recitation rooms and cloak rooms; while the second floor will be taken up by the large auditorium or study hall, and the offices of the Business Practices department, such as Commission House, Wholesale House, Bank, etc. The basement contains the toilet rooms, and the boiler room for hot-water heating.

Associated with Mr. Trenary are Mrs.
Trenary, Principle of the shorthand dept.;
F. M. Davis, principle of the Business department; and Paul D. Utt, principle of the English or teacher's department.
These teachers are chosen for their fitness,
for the positions they fill and for their undivided and unselfish interest in the young men and women under their instruction.

The Business course is designed to give thorough and systematic training in modern business. It includes such subjects as book keeping, the laws of business, writing, arithmetic, commercial geography, the drawing of all kinds of all papers as checks notes, deeds, and many others necessary to the intelligent man, no matter whether he is to be a hod-carrier or a banker.

The Shorthand course trains for office correspondents, private secretaries, etc.
The English course is for those who are obtaining such general information and education as one needs to perform the duties and enjoy the privileges of American citizenship, as well as for those who expect to teach in the public schools.
All branches required for a second grade certificate together with general history, political economy, etc., are taught in this course. Mr. Utt is a graduate from the Platteville normal, and is familiar with the requirements of teachers.

No better proof can be given of the excellence of the course of study and the thoroughness of the instruction in the College of Commerce than the success of its graduates. Scores of its students are now filling positions of responsibility in the cities and towns of Wisconsin and Northwestern Illinois. Scarcely a business house of Kenosha is without its representative of the college, while N. R. Allen's Sons employ four of its graduates, the Simmons Mfg. Company, six, and a booklet now before us contains half-tone cuts of the many faces of five of its "boys" behind the counter of the First National Bank.

The citizens of Kenosha and of Kenosha County are not unmindful of the value of this excellent school, and speak in commendable terms of its success and usefulness.

Women as Treasurers.

An interesting fact brought out by the recent elections in Colorado is the marked tendency of Colorado men to elect women as city treasurers. Mrs. Margaret Robins was unanimously chosen city treasurer of Idaho Springs. At Aspen, Mrs. E. A.
Kenney was re-elected to the same office by a large majority. Mrs. Jennie Gale was elected city treasurer at New Castle. Mrs.
Emma C. Palmer in Greeley, Mrs. Clara A.
Clark at Alma, Mrs. Mary Shanks at Orray, Miss Nellie E. Donahue at Vail, and Mrs. A. N. Frowine at Manitou.
In several other towns women came near being elected city treasurers, running ahead of their tickets; and in a number of cities in Kansas women were chosen to the same position. In almost all these places the men outnumbered the women; so if the women are put in office, it is because the men wish it so. In these days of bolting bank cashiers and manifold embezzlements perhaps the men feel that this particular office is safer in the hands of the sex least given to stealing and stock-speculation.
Whatever may be the explanation, there can be no doubt of the fact that in the Western States, women are in favor as city treasurers. A number of women were also chosen city clerks.

The Doctor's Dilemma

By Hesba Stretton

"OH, no phantom!" I said, touching her hand again. "No, we will not go back to the shore. Tardif shall row us to the caves, and I will take you into them, and then we two will return along the cliffs. Would you like that, mam-zelle?"

"Very much," she answered, the smile still playing about her face. It was brown and freckled with exposure to the sun, but so full of health and life as to be doubly beautiful to me, who saw so many wan and sickly faces.

"Doctor," said Tardif's deep, grave voice behind me, "your mother, is she better?"

It was like the sharp prick of a pin, and which presently you knew must pierce your heart.

The one moment of rapture had fled. The Paradise that had been about me for an instant, with no hint of pain, faded out of my sight. But Olivia remained, and her face grew sad, and her voice low and sorrowful, as she leaned forward to speak to me.

"I have been so grieved for you," she said. "Your mother came to see me once, and promised to be my friend."

We said no more for some minutes, and the splash of the oars in the water was the only sound. Olivia's air continued sad, and her eyes were downcast, as if she shrank from looking me in the face.

"Pardon me, doctor," said Tardif in our own dialect, which Olivia could not understand. "I have made you sorry when you were having a little gladness. Is your mother very ill?"

"There is no hope, Tardif," I answered, looking round at his honest and handsome face, full of concern for me.

"May I speak to you as an old friend?" he asked. "You love mam-zelle, and you are come to tell her so?"

"What makes you think that?" I said.

"I see it in your face," he answered, lowering his voice, though he knew Olivia could not tell what we were saying. "Your marriage with mademoiselle your cousin was broken off—why? Do you suppose I did not guess? I knew it from the first week you stayed with us. Nobody could see mam-zelle as we see her without loving her."

"The Sark folks say you are in love with her yourself, Tardif," I said, almost against my will.

His lips contracted and his face saddened, but he met my eyes frankly.

"It is true," he answered; "but what then? If it had only pleased God to make me like you, or that she should be of my class, I would have done my utmost to win her. But that is impossible! See, I am nothing else than a servant in her eyes. I do not know how to be anything else, and I am content. She is as far above my reach as one of the white clouds up yonder. To think of myself as anything but her servant would be irreverent."

"You are a good fellow, Tardif," I exclaimed.

"God is the judge of that," he said with a sigh. "Mam-zelle thinks of me only as her servant. My good Tardif, do this, or do that. I like it. I do not know any happier moment than when I hold her little boots in my hand and brush them. You see she is as helpless and tender as my little wife was; but she is very much higher than my poor little wife. Yes, I love her as I love the blue sky, and the white clouds, and the stars shining in the night. But it will be quite different between her and you."

"I hope so," I thought to myself.

"You do not feel like a servant," he continued, his oars dipping a little too deeply and setting the boat rocking. "By-and-by, when you are married, she will look up to you and obey you. I do not understand altogether why the good God has made this difference between us two; but I see it and feel it. It would be fitting for you to be her husband; it would be a shame to her to become my wife."

"Are you grieved about it, Tardif?" I asked.

"No, no," he answered; "we have always been good friends, you and I, doctor. No, you shall marry her, and I will be happy. I will come to visit you sometimes, and she will call me her good Tardif. That is enough for me."

At last we gained one of the entrances to the caves, but we could not pull the boat quite up to the strand. A few paces of shallow water, clear as glass, with pebbles sparkling like gems beneath it, lay between us and the caves.

"Tardif," I said, "you need not wait for us. We will return by the cliffs."

"You know the caves as well as I do?" he replied, though in a doubtful tone.

"All right!" I said, as I swung over the side of the boat into the water, when I found myself knee-deep. Olivia looked from me to Tardif with a flushed face—an angry that made my pulses leap. Why should her face never change when he carried her in his arms? Why should she shrink from me?

"Are you as strong as Tardif?" she asked, lingering, and hesitating before she would trust herself to me.

"Almost, if not altogether," I answered gaily. "I'm strong enough to undertake to carry you without wetting the soles of your feet. Come, it is not more than half a dozen yards."

She was standing on the bench I had just left, looking down at me with the same wild flush upon her cheeks and forehead, and with an uneasy expression in her eyes. Before she could speak again, I put my arms round her, and lifted her down.

"You are quite as light as a feather," I said, laughing, as I carried her to the strip of moist and humid strand under the archway in the rocks. As I put her down I looked back to Tardif, and saw him regarding us with grave and sorrowful eyes.

"Adieu!" he cried; "I am going to look after my lobster pots. God bless you both!"

He spoke the last words heartily; and we stood watching him as long as he was in sight. Then we went on into the caves.

I had known the caves well when I was a boy, but it was many years since

I had been there. Now I was alone in them with Olivia, no other human being in sight or sound of us. I had scarcely eyes for any sight but that of her face, which had grown shy and downcast, and was generally turned away from me. She would be frightened, I thought, if I spoke to her in that jocular way. I would wait till we were on the cliffs, in the open eye of day.

She left my side for one moment whilst I was poking under a stone for a young plover, which had darkened the little pool of water round it with its inky fluid. I heard her utter an exclamation of delight, and I gave up my pursuit instantly to learn what was giving her pleasure.

She was stooping down to look beneath a low arch, not more than two feet high, and I knelt beside her. Beyond lay a straight, narrow channel of transparent water, blue from a faint reflected light, with smooth sculptured walls of rock, clear from mottled, rising on each side of it. Level lines of mimic waves rippled monotonously upon it, as if it was stirred by some soft wind which we could not feel. You could have peeped it with tiny boats flitting across it, or skimming lightly down it. Tears shone in Olivia's eyes.

"It reminds me so of a canal in Venice," she said, in a tremulous voice.

"Do you know Venice?" I asked; and the recollection of her portrait taken in Florence came to my mind.

"Oh, yes!" she answered. "I spent three months there once, and this place is like it."

"Was it a happy time?" I inquired, jealous of those tears.

"It was a hateful time," she said vehemently. "Don't let us talk of it."

"You have traveled a great deal, then?" I pursued, wishing her to talk about herself, for I could scarcely trust my resolution to wait till we were out of the caves. "I love you with all my heart and soul," was on my tongue's end.

"We traveled nearly all over Europe," she replied.

"I wondered whom she meant by 'we,'" she had never used the plural pronoun before, and I thought of that odious woman in Guernsey—an unpleasant recollection.

"We had wandered back to the opening where Tardif had left us. The rapid current between us and Breckhou was running in swift eddies. Olivia stood near me; but a sort of chilly diffidence had crept over me, and I could not have ventured to press too closely to her, or to touch her with my hand."

"How have you been content to live here?" I asked.

"This year in Sark has saved me," she answered softly.

"What has it saved you from?" I inquired, with intense eagerness. She turned her face full upon me, with a world of reproach in her grey eyes.

"Dr. Martin," she said, "why will you persist in asking me about my former life? Tardif never does. He never implies by a word or look that he wishes to know more than I choose to tell. I cannot tell you anything about it."

Just then my ear caught for the first time a low boom-boom, which had probably been sounding through the caves for some minutes.

"Good heavens!" I ejaculated.

Yet a moment's thought convinced me that, though there might be little risk, there was no paralyzing danger. I had forgotten the narrowness of the gully, through which alone we could gain the cliffs. From the open gap of the bench where we were now standing, there was no chance of leaving the caves except as we had come to them, by a boat.

Each side a crag ran like a wall, the water there was not a moment to lose. Without a word, I snatched up Olivia in my arms, and ran back into the caves, making as rapidly as I could for the long, straight passage.

Neither did Olivia speak a word, or utter a cry. We found ourselves in a low, tunnel, where the water was beginning to flow in pretty strongly. I set her down for an instant, and tore off my coat and waistcoat. Then I caught her up again, and strode along over the slippery, slimy masses of rock which lay under my feet, covered with seaweed.

"Olivia," I said, "I must have my right hand free to steady myself with. Put both your arms round my neck and cling to me so. Don't touch my arms or shoulders."

Yet the clinging of her arms about my neck and her cheek close to mine, almost unnerved me. I held her fast with my left arm, and staid myself with my right. We gained in a minute or two the mouth of the tunnel. The drift was pouring into it with a force almost too great for me, burdened as I was

But there was the pause of the tide, when the waves rushed out again in white floods, leaving the water comparatively shallow. There were still six or eight yards to traverse before we could reach an archway in the cliffs, which would land us in safety in the outer caves. There was some peril, but we had no alternative. I lifted Olivia a little higher against my shoulder, for her long serge dress, wrapped dangerously around us both; and then waiting for the pause in the throbbing of the tide, I dashed hastily across.

One swirl of the water coiled about us, washing up nearly to my throat, and giving me almost a choking sensation of dread; but before a second could swoop down upon us I had staggered half-blinded to the arch, and put down Olivia in the small, secure cave within it. She had not spoken once. She did not seem able to speak now. Her large, terrified eyes looked up at me dumbly, and her face was white to the lips. I clasped her in my arms once more, and kissed her forehead and lips again and again, in a paroxysm of passionate love and gladness.

"Olivia," I cried, "I wish you to become my wife."

"You wish that?" she gasped, recoiling. "Oh, no, no—I am already married!"

CHAPTER XV.

Olivia's answer struck me like an electric shock. For some moments I was simply stunned, and knew neither what she had said, nor where we were.

"Olivia," I cried, stretching out my arms towards her, as though she would flutter back to them and lay her head against where it had been resting upon my shoulder, with her face against my neck.

But she did not see my gesture, and the next moment I knew that she could never let me hold her in my arms again. I dared not even take one step nearer to her.

"Olivia," I said again, after another minute or two of troubled silence—"Olivia, it is true?"

She bowed her head still lower upon her hands, in speechless confirmation. A stricken, helpless, cowering child, she seemed to me, standing there in her drenched clothing. An unutterable tenderness, altogether different from the feverish love of a few minutes ago, filled my heart as I looked at her.

"Come," I said, as calmly as I could speak, "I am at any rate your doctor, and I am bound to take care of you. You must not stay here wet and cold. Let us make haste back to Tardif's, Olivia."

I drew her hand down from her face and through my arm, for we had still to re-enter the outer cave, and to return through a higher gallery, before we could reach the cliffs above. I did not glance at her. The road was very rough, strewn with huge boulders, and she was compell-

Value of Irrigation.

The universal use of irrigation in the West has practically revolutionized farm values in many regions. These methods of supplying the crops with water are many, but they all show an amount of adaptation to conditions that proves the existence of Yankee genius here yet. There are more varieties of windmills for pumping up water than one could describe in a week. These windmills are not expensive affairs, but in most cases are built of ordinary articles picked up on the farm or in second-hand shops. They perform the work required of them satisfactorily, and that is all one can ask of them. The construction of a good working windmill on any farm, and a pumping attachment, with irrigation canals and reservoir, adds a hundred or two per cent to the value of a farm in a region where summer droughts are heavy drawbacks to farming. With a little extra work during the winter season it is an easy matter to make such improvements on almost any farm. The system can be enlarged and extended season by season, and the farm gradually enhanced in value.

A farm that has a fair home-made irrigation plant is practically independent of the weather. The farmer is then sure of his crop no matter how hot or dry the season may prove. The great benefit derived from an irrigation plant is so apparent that it seems strange that so few are in existence. It is not always necessary to build a windmill for irrigation, for there are often natural advantages which any farmer can avail himself of. When brooks flow through farms they furnish in the winter and spring seasons an abundance of water, but when summer advances they often dry up and prove of no earthly good. The question of importance is how can such a stream be converted into use for irrigating the plants. It would not be so difficult if a reservoir was dug and built on the farm, so that the water could be stored. Such a reservoir could easily be increased in size each year, and with the water stored in it, what would prevent digging ditches to carry the water to the fields when needed? Some will say that such work represents an immense amount of labor; but if the farmer intends to live permanently on his farm, will it not pay him to do a little toward the improvement each year, even though it may take ten years to complete the job? He can rest assured that he is increasing the value of his farm fully 10 per cent every year, a fact which he will realize when he comes to sell it.—Professor James S. Doty, New York.

Poultry House for Large Chickens. When the chickens are about one-quarter grown and have left the mother hen they should be provided with some sort of a shelter for night use and for use on stormy days. A coop for these chickens may be built for very little money. One side of the coop is formed by the side of a building or a fence, and at the lower end comes within two inches of the ground. The roof of rough boards is covered with tarred or waterproof paper. An opening is cut in one side next to the fence or wall. Inside, roosts are arranged, and in one corner is placed a dust bath. The roosts will have to be put in before the roof is put on, as the house is not designed with one bolt where the evener goes to serve as prop for the evener, pass the rope through the pulley and tie on each end of the evener. This gives free play to both sides of the evener. There is no side draft, but put the heaviest team on the outside. This device can be used on either a right or left hand binder and gives perfect satisfaction. The illustration is self explanatory. There should also be a cleft in the center of the evener to fasten the evener to the outer end of the prop.

Imperfect Plum Blossoms. Fruit growers have met with a difficulty in the successful cultivation of the native plum in the fact that some varieties are self-sterile; that is, they do not fertilize themselves. Isolated trees and large orchards of Wild Goose and Miner have proved shy bearers, while when planted intermingled with other varieties blooming at the same time and furnishing an abundance of pollen they have borne many crops. Hence it is important to determine the most suitable list of varieties for an orchard so as to insure the most perfect pollination of all the blossoms. Newman is considered a good pollinizer for Wild Goose, while De Solo, Wolf, and Forest Garden are regarded as good fertilizers for Miner. Isolated trees of the self-sterile varieties may be made fruitful by top grafting some of the limbs with suitable varieties, or by planting trees of these sorts adjacent.

Mixed planting of self-fertile and important varieties in hedge-like rows or in alternate rows is now advocated and practiced by our best growers. Some growers prefer to confine their choice of varieties to those that are self-sterile.—Farmer's Review.

Indigestion in Horses. It is difficult to give causes of indigestion in horses, for it may come from improper water, as from improper foods, although the latter are usually at the bottom of the trouble. A proper variety in the foods will do much to keep the digestive organs in good condition, particularly if in the variety there is considerable green food of a succulent nature, as most root crops are. When indigestion is caused by improper water, it is usually the case that the water is foul in some way, although very hard water often produces indigestion, or, what is worse, stone in the kidney or bladder, the latter being a disease quite common among horses in districts where the water is hard. If the food is of the proper kind and hard water is being used, attention should be given it before a valuable animal is lost. If possible, give rain water, but if this is not convenient, add a small quantity of caustic potash to the hard water, which will materially improve it.

Dairy Thermometers. A good dairy thermometer costs less than $1, and lots of butter go into the grease vats every year because thousands of farmers' wives do not use a thermometer in churning. A noted dairy instructor once told the writer that he firmly believed that the average price of all the butter sold in the United States could be increased at least 2 cents per pound in two years if the thermometer was used at every churning and the cream churned at the proper temperature.—Land and a Living.

forms it preserves in all force, it seems. The contents of slop bowls from the room of the patient sick with typhoid had, if the sun is shining hot, better by far be thrown upon the ground than buried. A log heap is the proper disinfectant in these cases, kept burning night and day as long as there is anything from the sick room to throw into it.—Indianapolis News.

Peach Yellows.

Occasionally we see statements from some one that the peach yellows is not at all a contagious disease, and that there is nothing gained by removing trees in which it has appeared. Some State Legislatures have enacted laws making such destruction of trees compulsory on their owners, while in other States there has been so much opposition to such laws that they could not be passed. The best authorities are agreed, so far as we have seen, that it is contagious. We remember that a few years ago, Mr. J. H. Hale, the largest peach grower in Connecticut and in Georgia, said to the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture that in 1890 he found one affected tree in an orchard and he rooted it out. The next year he had to take out the four trees next to where it stood, and the next year he had about forty to take out. Possibly if he had taken the affected tree and four next to it, as soon as found, it might not have spread to the other forty. If it shows on one tree, there are many chances that it has reached others near that one, though it may not have reached a stage where it can be detected even by close observation.—American Cultivator.

Four Horse Evener.

A correspondent sends to Iowa Homestead a sketch of a four horse evener for a binder which, he says, is in almost universal use in his section of the country. Take a common evener off from your disk, buy a 15-cent pulley and about ten feet of stout rope or chain, which will cover all the expense. Take a piece of 2 by 6 and bolt on tongue with one bolt where the evener goes to serve as prop for the evener, pass the rope through the pulley and tie on each end of the evener. This gives free play to both sides of the evener. There is no side draft, but put the heaviest team on the outside. This device can be used on either a right or left hand binder and gives perfect satisfaction. The illustration is self explanatory. There should also be a cleft in the center of the evener to fasten the evener to the outer end of the prop.

Imperfect Plum Blossoms. Fruit growers have met with a difficulty in the successful cultivation of the native plum in the fact that some varieties are self-sterile; that is, they do not fertilize themselves. Isolated trees and large orchards of Wild Goose and Miner have proved shy bearers, while when planted intermingled with other varieties blooming at the same time and furnishing an abundance of pollen they have borne many crops. Hence it is important to determine the most suitable list of varieties for an orchard so as to insure the most perfect pollination of all the blossoms. Newman is considered a good pollinizer for Wild Goose, while De Solo, Wolf, and Forest Garden are regarded as good fertilizers for Miner. Isolated trees of the self-sterile varieties may be made fruitful by top grafting some of the limbs with suitable varieties, or by planting trees of these sorts adjacent.

ed to receive my help. But we did not speak again till we were on the cliffs, in the eye of day, with our faces and our steps turned towards Tardif's farm.

"Sorry that I love you?" I asked, feeling that my love was growing every moment in spite of myself. The sun shone on her face, which was just below my eyes. There was an expression of sad perplexity and questioning upon it, which kept away every other sign of emotion.

"Yes," she answered; "it is such a miserable, unfortunate thing for you. But how could I have helped it?"

"You could not help it," I said.

"I did not mean to deceive you," she continued; "neither you nor any one. When I died away from my husband I had no plan of any kind. I was just like a leaf driven about by the wind, and it tossed me here. I did not think I ought to tell any one I was married. I wish I could have foreseen this."

"Are you surprised that I love you?" I asked.

Now I saw a subtle flush steal across her face, and her eyes fell to the ground.

"I never thought of it, till this afternoon," she murmured. "I knew you were going to marry your cousin Julia, and I knew I was married, and that there could be no release from that. All my life I have been yours, and Tardif made it more so. I did not think you loved me because of my face this afternoon."

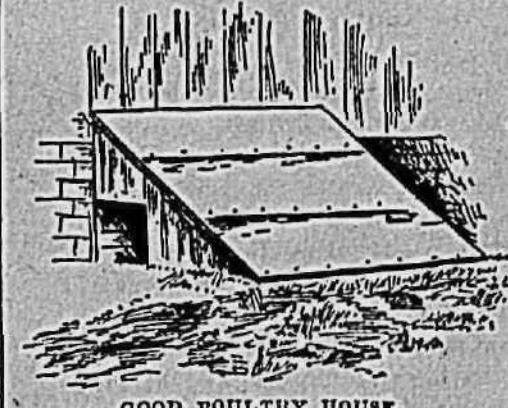

"You always love you," I cried passionately, looking down on the shining, drooping head beside me, and the sad face and listless arms hanging down in an attitude of dejection.

"No," she answered in her clear, sorrowful voice. "When you see calmly that there is an evil thing you will conquer it. There will be no hope whatever in your love for me, and it will pass away. Not soon, perhaps; I can scarcely wish you to forget me so. Yet it would be wrong for you to love me now. Why was I driven to marry him so long ago?"

"Your husband must have treated you very badly, before you would take such a desperate step as this," I said again, after a long silence, scarcely knowing what I said.

"He treated me so ill," said Olivia, with the same hard tone in her voice, that when I had a chance to escape it seemed as if heaven itself opened the floor for me. He treated me so ill that I thought there was any fear of him finding me out here. I would rather, a thousand times, you had left me to die in the caves."

Protect the Farm Well. Tests made at experiment stations show that water from farm wells is frequently contaminated with some impurity drawn from surrounding stables, pens, etc., and a lack of drainage to carry off surface water. CAMP LAKE.

Moon light on the lakes has been a pleasant amusement during the past week. Every boat that could be secured was in urgent demand and lovers had every opportunity to appreciate these beautiful lines: "I have another life I long to meet."

Three bus loads of guests from Camp Lake and Lamb's hotel attended mass on Sunday and a number of ladies sung during the service. The church was crowded and the young pastor delivered a masterly sermon. The annual picnic for the benefit of this church will be given on the 15th day of this month and it is predicted that it will be a happy event.

W. Webster and his brother, of Milwaukee, were here spending a few days with his family and enjoyed a day fishing. When they returned Mrs. W. Webster asked her husband how they succeeded and he replied that they did not know what to do with all the fish caught. They had captured a pike which must weighed ten pounds and about a dozen of black bass. Mrs. Webster declared it to be a fish story and wagged a hat for her husband against a new fall bonnet. When asked where were the fish the husband declared that he placed them in the hotel ice box. An examination of the ice box was made but not a fish could be found. Mr. Webster was non-plused and protested that the fish was stolen or appropriated by the hotel proprietor. Mrs. Webster won her fall bonnet.

Never in the history of this delightful summer resort has there been such a demand for apartments at both hotels as the present season. Large numbers have been turned away, so great has been the demand. At Camp Lake hotel, Saturday evening is devoted to dancing and crowds come from surrounding country to tip the light fantastic to the sweet strains of music furnished Prof. Hendricks and his accomplished wife. The general line of amusements include hay-mek rides, which occur nightly; fishing and fish stories in abundance, euchre parties, together with evening concerts given in the spacious parlor of the hotel. The guests during the past week have been in rapture over the sweet melodies sung by Prof. Charles T. Patterson, the noted tenor. His rich voice caused the guests to gush in effervescence and with rapturous enthusiasms. One of the events of the week was a trip around the country, passing through Wilmet and thence northwest to Twin Lakes where the company sat down to a sumptuous dinner and listened to sweet music at the club house. The party returned late in the evening after enjoying an ideal day.

Lake County M. W. A. and R. N. A. Picnic.

We take pleasure in announcing to all Woodmen and Royal Neighbors and their many friends, that the Association will hold its next annual picnic at Wauconda Thursday, August 15, 1901, and it is hoped that members of these societies and their friends may attend in large numbers.

Wauconda Camp M. W. A. No. 643 and Alico Camp R. N. A. will act as host and hostess, a register will be open all day and it is hoped that members of all camps in Lake County will register.

These annual meetings are to be passed around, each year finding us a new host, and in that way members of these societies become acquainted and the bond of fraternity between the different camps as well as between members, be cemented the firmer together. We hold that this plan of meeting is far better than the excursion to distant points, as every Woodman and Royal Neighbor in this county may attend these picnics at less expense than is attached to an excursion, which accommodates one tenth of their membership. Besides it gives the young an excellent opportunity to study the physical geography of the county. Its hills and dales, its forests and streams, its beautiful lakes and all, while enjoying themselves. The average cost of the trip to Wauconda will not exceed fifty cents while a trip by rail to any point as interesting would cost three times the amount.

In many instances those having teams will take their less fortunate neighbors and with lunch baskets filled, and feed for the horses, not forgotten, a day of old-fashioned picnicing may be passed for which you will be forever happier.

What is the program? Well, as we said before, Wauconda is the host and we have known her people all our lives and never knew any better. This ought to be enough, but to specialize we will further state that a ball game, a platform dance, forester's drill, and games and races will be in order. A brass band will be present and louder than all, the deep voice of the Honorable Wm. E. Mason will stir you to fraternity and patriotism; a band of singers will cheer you and every citizen of Wauconda will welcome you. Remember Thursday, August 15, 1901, at Wauconda. It may be your next turn to entertain so you should not fail to visit Wauconda this year. L. O. BROCKWAY, Sec.

A YOUNG LADY'S LIFE SAVED.

At Panama, Columbia, by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

Dr. Chas. H. Utter, a prominent physician, of Panama, Columbia, in a recent letter states: "Last March I had as a patient a young lady sixteen years of age, who had a very bad attack of dysentery. Every thing I prescribed for her proved ineffectual, and she was growing worse every hour. Her parents were sure she would die. She had become so weak that she could not turn over in bed. What to do at this critical moment was a study for me, but I thought of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and as a last resort prescribed it. The most wonderful result was effected. Within eight hours she was feeling much better; inside of three days she was upon her feet and at the end of one week she was entirely well." For sale by W. H. Emmons, Antioch; Grayslake Pharmacy.

CHAPTER XII.

"HE MADE ME LIVE A LIE."

FOR a moment Erna was stupefied by the outburst of passion from Lisle. She had begun to think that her new friend would accept the change in her destiny as a matter of course and that in fact she was secretly glad that fate had created her a woman. The repressed passion which Lisle had suffered without manifesting any sign was a phase of character entirely foreign to her understanding. All her life Erna had without restraint expressed every emotion that possessed her, and she could not comprehend a nature which concealed the impulses of the heart until they were swollen to such an extent that they burst all bounds and swept everything before them, just as a raging torrent, held in check for years, at last demolishes the solid wall of masonry which holds it and rushes downward to engulf and destroy everything that lies in its path. She did not know that Lisle's calmness in view of the discovery made was the result of pride of will, which dominated her every act. She could not understand a woman who could endure with calmness agony that was consuming her like fire within, and instead of assisting Lisle, as she had been requested to do, she stood with clasped hands, parted lips and bated breath, terror-stricken by the revelation of a depth of passion which she had not believed existed.

Not until Lisle had torn the "instruments of torture" apart and flung them savagely to the far end of the room did she regain her composure; then, using much better judgment than would have been expected of her, she sprang to the assistance of her friend, but without offering any protest against what she had said and, better still, without venturing to give advice at a moment when it could neither be appreciated nor followed.

Lisle kept silence also while being divested of the costume in which Erna had dressed her. Not until she had resumed the masculine attire, the one laid out for Erna and not the one previously worn, did she utter a word, but the struggle was raging within her with the same savage fury with which it had announced itself, and Erna, watching her furtively, became more and more dismayed.

When Lisle was fully dressed in the garments to which she was accustomed, she walked to the window and with her back turned toward the room said quietly:

"Dress yourself, Erna, as you were last night. While you are busy I will think. Do not speak to me, please, until you are dressed."

Erna hastened to obey. Lisle's demeanor owed her into silence. She felt instinctively that she was in the presence of a character which dominated everything. She was, without being sensible of it, afraid, and she worked in silence, rapidly.

"I am ready, Lisle," she said at last, but the girl at the window did not hear, and she approached timidly and touched her upon one shoulder.

"I am ready, Lisle," she repeated, almost fearing that the words would call forth another tirade of passionate anger, but Lisle turned calmly, and there was a pathetic smile upon her lips when she spoke.

"Forgive me, Erna, for giving way as I did a few moments ago. I will endeavor not to repeat the offense. Such evidences of weakness cannot benefit me, and certainly you are not to blame. The only person who is responsible for this moment lies dead in another room, and my vengeance cannot reach him. I am calm now and cold, too, as cold as death, and, I think, as unfeeling. You do not understand me. Nobody does; nobody ever can. I fear. If I am revengeful, it is because I inherit it and because I have been taught to be so ever since I can remember. If I hate and despise the memory of that dead man who taught me to call him father, as he taught me to believe myself to be a man, the sin rests upon his soul, not upon mine or yours. If I am unreasonable in my anger and rebellion against something that I cannot help or avoid, it is because that insane man wronged me so, not because you discovered and revealed the truth. The truth I am glad to know. I am angry only because it has been denied to me all these years. Can a human being commit a greater sin than to seize upon and defy a law of Almighty God and with his puny strength dare to make the effort to alter it? I think not. Just heaven! Cannot you, my friend, imagine something of the horror of the position I am in? I realize the danger which surrounds me without knowing what it is. I know that there are bottomless pitfalls in my path, but I cannot locate them or recognize them when I see them. I know that there is something left for me to do, but I have no means of knowing what that duty is, for that despicable dead man, while he lived, was far too cunning to have left behind him evidence which will direct me. Think how he fooled me! Think how he has misled me! Think of the lie that he lived and compelled me to live! Where shall I find truth in his career? And, if I find it, how shall I recognize it? Do you wonder that I am beside myself? Do you wonder that I fear to speak lest I will shriek aloud with a rage that is as impotent as a particle of dust in a whirlwind? Tell me, Erna, who besides yourself is aware of this secret that we share?"

"Nobody, Lisle," gasped Erna.

"Does not your father know?"

"Nobody knows but me." She told the falsehood tremblingly, but with decision, for she already stood in more awe of this strange woman than she feared the consequences of a harmless lie.

"I am glad of that," commented Lisle, and Erna breathed a sigh of relief for the lie that she had told and in recollection of the fact that she had already warned her father that he was not to appear to know the truth until informed that he could do so. She had attended to that when she ran to him just before Lisle went out with her to the grove of pines. "I am very glad of it. I will tell him the truth myself after a little, when I have become calmer."

"Calmer? You are calm now, Lisle, frightfully calm!" exclaimed Erna.

"True; I am frightfully calm. That exactly expresses it. It is the calmness of despair, of rage, of rebellion, of a torrent of water, mightily deep, which runs smoothly upon the surface, but which is carrying the universe along with it in its silent depths. That is the calmness that I feel. Do you think that your father will consent to remain here with me for a few days?"

"He shall do so whether he consents or not. I'll make him do it!" Then, noting the expression of wonder that came into Lisle's eyes, she added: "Of course he will consent. He never refuses me anything, and in this case I think he will propose it anyway."

"I will be very grateful. Tomorrow or the day after I must tell him what I am. I must beseech him to advise me, and—"

"I know what you must do. You must leave this ranch and all that concerns it in the care of your men and return to Kansas City with me. There in my home—"

Lisle raised one hand in protest. "It is kind," she said, "but it cannot be so at present. I have much to learn before I will consent to face the world. You forget the long years of training that must be overcome before I can hope to acquire the rudiments of the new life that I must live. Already I know much that you have not told me. The life that I must begin is entirely different from the life that I leave behind me when I assume the garb that you wear and appear before the world for what I really am—a woman. God, how I hate it! What would happen if I should go with you now? I would discover insults in compliments; I would mistake deliberate offenses for favors. Ever since I was old enough to hold a pistol in my hand I have been taught to resent affronts with bullets. Would you have me murder your best friends? No; my place is here until I can go elsewhere with the freedom that knowledge alone can impart. I am neither one thing nor the other now. I am neither man nor woman. I am a monstrosity—a freak—a thing! Here you respect me; there you would despise me. Here I am master; there I would be—nothing! Here, for awhile at least, I can still be a man; there—fate! Let us go to your father. Then, when I have talked with him, I will ride out to meet Craig Thompson."

"Mr. Thomas walked out upon the veranda with Lisle at her request. "Everything has been attended to, or is being done, Lisle," he said, adopting the given name in preference to using a pronoun which he did not know how to select. "Your men—that is, those who have not been sent out on errands—have proved themselves extremely efficient in every way, and in an hour—" "I thank you, sir. I do not care for the details. It is very kind of you to oversee everything. Perhaps later I will know better how to express my appreciation. Just now—"

"Not a word! Not a word, Lisle. Why, I feel already as if I had known you always. I'll go ahead just as though I had, and now, if you will take my advice, you will get on your horse and go for a good ride. It will do you good—lots of it! Take the word of Thomas O. Thomas for that."

CHAPTER XIII.

"DON'T GO BACK ON THE DEAD MAN!"

CRAIG THOMPSON, with the bridle of a led horse in his grasp and with three men similarly provided accompanying him, was riding with all speed toward Maxwell's ranch. Already half the distance of 30 miles had been covered, and already he had changed horses twice, urging them to their utmost effort, impatient, silent, dogged. Before him, not half a mile away, was a rise of ground, more lofty than the others, and as he spurred his animal toward it a horseman emerged from the blank beyond and halted upon its crest, silhouetted against the sky. Even at that distance Craig recognized the rider, and, rising in his stirrups, he waved his hat in greeting. The salutation was returned. The half mile which separated the men was quickly traveled, and the galloping party came to a halt. "Ride on ahead, boys," ordered Craig addressing his companions. "I'll trail along behind with the kid. We'll get there soon enough, I reckon, since Lisle is out here to meet us. Is it true, Lisle, that Tom Thomas and his girl are there?"

"Yes. They are at the house."

"That's all right. You skip along, boys, and don't mind us. We'll jog along at a slower pace. Lord, kid, but it was lucky that I was home. I hadn't been there more'n an hour either when Pete rode up with the news. No foul play, was there, Lisle?"

"No."

"Just turned up his toes without a word, eh? Broke your heart, too, eh?"

"Pull up here and let me look at you. What's the matter with you, lad? That ain't all great that I see in your face. There's something else there. What makes your eyes blaze so? You look just as you did when you drew that bead on Jim Cummings while your other arm was held fast to your body by the rope."

"I feel very much the same as I did then, Craig," responded Lisle. "I am in very much the same position with the difference that I cannot see an enemy to fire at. Let us rest here awhile. I have something to tell you."

They did not leave their saddles, but sat vis-a-vis, Lisle with her back toward the ranch, Craig facing it and studying with manifest care the loping of the horses which bore the three men who had ridden on ahead. He considered it best not to speak again until his young friend had told what there was to say.

"Craig," said Lisle presently, "you have regarded me as rather a queer specimen of a boy ever since we first met. There is something concerning me that must be told, something that I wish to tell you, something that just now I could not tell to any other person—something which you must retain as a secret in your own heart until I give you permission to reveal it and, above all, something concerning which you must advise and direct me."

"Let it go, lad; I'm listening."

"I am a woman, Craig."

Thompson did not move a muscle of his body except those which controlled his visual organs. He turned his eyes slowly until they rested upon the face of Lisle, and then, with marked deliberation, but undoubted emphasis, he said:

"You don't mean it?"

"I am a woman, Craig."

"Who told you?"

"Miss Thomas."

"How did she know it?"

"I do not exactly know. When my—when Richard Maxwell died, I fainted."

She revived me, and—"

"I know the rest. Does Tom Thomas know?"

"Not yet."

Thompson did not speak again for a moment or two. The muscles of his Rising in his stirrups, he waved his hat in greeting.

face were working, however, as though he were thinking words which he did not care to utter.

"Did you know it, Craig?" asked Lisle suspiciously.

"Know it? No! How should I know it? What do you think I am—a clairvoyant?"

"But you believe it now, do you not?"

"Of course I believe it. How could I help believing it? The only wonder is that I was such an idiot as not to see it at once. I ought to have seen it, and now, viewed in the light of understanding, I suppose I did see it without recognizing it. When I first came to this God forsaken country, I used to prospect for gold over there in the Sierras, and I've picked up pay dirt and checked it away again a good many times without knowing what it was. That's just how it was this time. Well, kid, before we go any deeper into this subject, I've got just one thing to say—I'm going to be father and mother and brother and sister and the hull billing lot of relatives to you from this on, without regard to conventionalities, and for the present, while I turn this thing over in my mind two or three times, I'm going to think, and while I'm thinking I'm going to treat you as I always have—just as if you were a boy—and lastly, before I speak very decidedly on the subject, I'm going to have a talk with Miss Erna Thomas. She's a whole team with a horse behind and a dog under the wagon. Let's ride on."

There was silence between them after that, neither speaking until the ranch was before them; then it was Craig Thompson who spoke.

"I brought Hank Smith along with me," he said. "He's handy with tools and can make a coffin in a jiffy. Where shall we break ground?"

"It makes no difference to me."

"I mean where do you want the old man buried?"

"I understood you. I do not care. Bury him where you please. It is all the same to me."

"Humph! Look here, Lisle, I understand how you feel, but you don't want to do anything now that you'll be sorry for later on, and it ain't fair to try and convict a man without hearing him in his own defense. Dick Maxwell's gone where he can't be heard, and I don't believe that you are made of the sort of stuff that's going to hit a man when he's down—leastwise that ain't exactly the way that I sized you up."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Your duty, not to him particularly, if you don't like it that way, but to yourself and to others—to me, to the cowboys on your ranch and to the world. It's the worst kind of a coward that turns tail at a time like this. You go to your room and wait for me. Think it over. A man may have lots of reasons for doing things, and they may be of the sort that he can't explain, but there's one thing that is dead certain, and that is that every son and every daughter in the world has got a credit as well as a debit account in the names of the old folks, and anybody who won't study both sides of the ledger before making out the balance sheet ain't fit to be mentioned in polite society, and, Lisle, the only really polite society in the world is the one that's made up of honest people."

Lisle reached out one hand and rested it upon the arm of her friend.

"You are right, Craig," she said.

"There is no need for me to think it over. You have done that for me in the few words that you have uttered. Before you leave me, however, there is one question which I must ask you."

"What is it, kid?"

"Do you despise me because I am a woman? Tell me truly—do you despise me?"

"Lisle, the man never lived who honestly despised women as a class. Here and there one man may have despised and hated one woman or two or a dozen—but all of 'em? Not much! Tain't natural, and God Almighty never made one of us that way."

"My father did."

"Not on your life, Lisle. The best proof that you are wrong is the fact that he hid himself away from 'em all the way he did. He did that because he loved 'em so that he didn't dare to go where they were for fear that his pride would give in to human nature. It's more than likely that one woman has deceived him somehow, and he got on his car, just as you have done at Craig. There wasn't any old crinner like Craig Thompson around to tell him the difference 'tween tweekedum and tweekledee. You just make out that balance sheet and look it over, and if you don't find more to your dad's credit than you've got ag'in him I'll eat it."

"But you have not replied to my question, Craig."

"Ain't I? Well, I'll answer it now. It don't make no difference to me or to any other man whether a human critter's a man or a woman. It's the critter, not the sex, that we look at. Nobody will ever be despised by anybody if he or she is honest and true. Those are the biggest words in the dictionary of human conduct, 'cause they mean the most. As for my despising you because you're a woman, the idea is infernal rot. When I despise a person, that person's pretty apt to know it, without asking questions on the subject. Look here, Lisle; I wasn't intending to talk any more to you till after I had a chance to turn things over in my mind, but I'll say this: You're facing a situation that looks a heap sicker bigger to you than it does or ever will to anybody else. You have found out that you are a woman without knowing what a woman is, and you sorter feel as if you was walking round arm in arm with your own ghost. You've met a stranger that you can't git away from for the rest of your life. You've got to get acquainted, and the sooner you get on familiar terms with yourself the better for all concerned. If you had been picked up and carried away and suddenly put down again on another planet, you couldn't have been in a much worse fix than you are now, but I reckon you'd find the inhabitants of the other place sort of decent, and you'd find 'em so here. I think that between Tom Thomas, Erna and me we can set you on the right road all right, but you've got to remember that you can't jump on to your horse and ride from here to my ranch in half an hour. If you do it in three, you're riding mighty fast, and you know it. So you see you can't expect to know everything that concerns this transformation of yours in a holy minute. It ain't the future that's puzzling me; it's the present. I'll have a talk with Tom and his daughter, and bimeby we'll look over Dick's papers and things. The dominie'll be here about sundown, and we'll have the funeral and plant your grave in the morning, and tomorrow night after the rest have gone to bed you and me and maybe Tom will sit down in the library and talk it over. In the meantime I'll be doing some thinking, and you can tote Erna around the place and show her things and talk. Tom and I will manage everything. You jest leave that to us. You keep your head up and be a man yet a while. Don't let anybody see that things are any different, and for the rest put your elbow on Craig Thompson's shoulder and lean there, and, lastly, don't go back on the dead man."

He turned away abruptly and left Lisle alone, for they had brought their horses to a halt close beside the corral.

CHAPTER XIV.

LISLE'S RESOLUTION.

LISLE MAXWELL followed the advice given to her by Craig Thompson, and during the remainder of that day and the one succeeding it she kept much in the society of Erna, save at those intervals when her presence was required elsewhere. The friendship began so strangely, ripened rapidly, and at Erna's request they occupied the same room, so that their opportunity for the exchange of confidences was manifold. The servants were quartered in an adjacent building, and from them and from the cowboys employed upon the ranch the secret of Lisle's identity was kept, nor were the minister and the doctor made more wise.

After the funeral Craig called Lisle to him and conducted her to the library.

"We've been through Dick's papers," he said, "and everything is as shipshape as it could be. I found a letter addressed to me, written the same day that I went away from here after the round up. I reckon maybe Dick thought he might shuffle off without much warning, and he did. Something that I said to him that day weighed on his mind, I reckon, and he appointed me guardian pro tem. His will and everything concerning his business is in the hands of a lawyer in the east—in New York city—a feller named Dan Maxwell. Did you ever hear of him?"

"Never."

"Well, I suspect he's some relation, though I don't know. Anyhow I'm to notify him of Dick's death, and he'll do the rest, and the old man wanted me to stay here with you till Dan Maxwell's arrival. The letter tells me about your being a girl and says that I can use my own judgment about telling you before Dan Maxwell gets here, but it doesn't say a word about any reasons for the way he brought you up, and it doesn't explain a thing except what I have told you, only that the lawyer has full instructions how to act and that you are rich enough to do as you please for the rest of your life."

"Let me see the letter," said Lisle quietly.

Moquitoes Kept at Bay.

A railroad man who works in one of the switch towers on the line to Atlantic City, surrounded by a mosquito-infested swamp, has a plan of his own for keeping them out of the tower. He makes a ball out of newspapers and soaks it in coal oil just enough so that it will not drip. He hangs this midway between two windows and keeps it swinging all the time. He says that no matter how thick the mosquitoes may be outside they never care to pass it.—Philadelphia Times.

Record of the Comets.

During the nineteenth century 235 new comets were discovered, as against 62 in the eighteenth century. The nineteenth century also beheld a greater number of large and brilliant comets than did its predecessor. The first of these were the comets of 1811, 1843, 1868, 1881, and 1882. In the year 1800 only one periodical comet was known, Halley's; now many are known, of which at least seventeen have been seen at more than one return to perihelion.

Quail Hatched by a Turkey.

One of the most novel sights ever witnessed in Ohio in the way of rearing a family can be seen on the farm of Levi Wells, two miles east of Norwalk. An old hen turkey abandoned her own nest and took possession of a quail's nest in an old cherry orchard, and she has walked off the nest with thirteen healthy young quail, and she appears as proud of her young family as if they "walked turkey."—Columbus Evening Dispatch.

If the action of your bowels is not easy and regular serious complaint must be the final result. DeWitt's Little Early Risers will remove this danger. Safe, pleasant and effective. W. T. Hill.

A Famous Philosopher.

A true philosopher has been discovered among the ranks of harvesters in Rice county. One man returning to camp at night full of beer threw a pail of water over a tired sleeper. "You're a fool," the sleeper said, and let it go at that.—Topeka (Kan.) Capital.

Are you running for office this year? No, you darn fool, I'm running to Hill's drug store for a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin to cure this indigestion.

A $10,000 Harness Set.

The young Egyptian khedive is said to possess the most costly set of harness in the world. It is made of black leather, with chased gold buckles and collars, ornamented with the same costly metal. The hand-cloths are also embroidered with gold, and the set is said to have cost $22,000. It is for four horses and is used on all state occasions.

TRAIN IS HELD UP.

Robbers Make Bold Attempt 30 Miles from Chicago.

BLOW UP ONE COACH.

Force Crew to Cut Mail Cars Loose and Run Them Up the Track.

Four Masked Men Stop Chicago Express, Terrorize Passengers with Bullets, and Blow Up Baggage Car—Failing to Find Treasure Box, They Disappear—Engineer and Fireman Are Compelled, at the Point of Revolvers, to Assist the Desperadoes.

Four masked men held up the New York and Chicago express train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Calumet Heights, near Chicago, at 8 o'clock Wednesday night. They secured no cash. They blew open one of the baggage cars, thinking it the express car, terrorized the trainmen and passengers by shooting, and escaped in the scrub oak to the west, going toward Tracy, Ind. A reward of $500 has been offered by the superintendent of the road for any information that will lead to the arrest of the bandits. The express car which the robbers intended to raid contained a $50,000 shipment to Chicago banks.

The attempt at train robbery is one of the boldest on record. There is little doubt it would have been successful had there been a safe in the baggage car, as the robbers expected. The train was brought to a stop by the swinging of a red light across the tracks. It was in a lonely place with open prairie stubbed here and there with scrub oak. None of the trainmen made any resistance to the robbers, the shooting kept up by the bandits effectually preventing them making a fight or following the men.

As soon as the train came to a standstill two of the robbers mounted the engine, and placing revolvers at Engineer

TRAIN CREW, WRECKED CAR AND FEATURES OF THE HOLD-UP.

J. W. Collins and Fireman F. S. Deveny's hands, told them to get down and waste no time. The robbers followed, and while one stood guard over the engine, the other walked the fireman to the rear of the baggage car, which was the second car back of the engine, and compelled him to uncouple the two cars from the train. Then they returned to the engine, and the engineer was ordered to go ahead about 200 feet.

As soon as this was done one of the robbers produced a bunch of dynamite sticks, and placing one at the door of the baggage car, lighted the fuse and told the engineer and fireman to stand back. The explosion did not blow open the door, but loosened it, and the man with the dynamite then lighted another stick and threw it into the car through a wide crack that had been made. This explosion blew a big hole in the side of the car and in the floor. The robbers then compelled the engineer and fireman to get up into the car with them, and a quick search was made for the safe.

Kept Up Incessant Firing.

All the time the bandits were operating with the baggage car, they kept up a constant firing to keep the crew in submission, and to compel the passengers to remain inside the coaches.

Not finding what they sought, one of the robbers said:

"What will we do now?"

The other said: "Let's get out of this."

Both leaping to the ground, they ran to the side of the track, climbed the fence and were lost in the darkness.

While this was going on in the front part of the train the other masked bandits were keeping watch over the train standing on the track. They fired frequently, but no one was hurt, the passengers remaining in the coaches, and the crew making no sign. Just before the robbers were with the engineer quit the spot, one of them wrenched the engineer's watch from the chain. This was all the property that was taken.

The dynamited car was badly wrecked on one side, and the second explosion threw one wheel off the rail. After the disappearance of the robbers the crew assisted in getting the car on the track again, and the damaged car was pulled to Chicago. The men left forty-six sticks of dynamite.

To insure the stopping of the train, three or four bags of sand and two short rails were placed across the track. The red light seen by the engineer was waved about 300 feet from this obstruction.

Manufacturers of steel castings will combine. Capital $10,000,000.

VENEZUELA NEAR WAR.

Castro Government Is Facing a Conflict with Colombia.

A dispatch from Port of Spain, Trinidad, says Venezuela is again on the eve of a revolution, and not only is that unfortunate republic approaching a state of civil war, but serious complications will, in all probability, arise between the government of Venezuela and Colombia. President Castro, while facing the uprising against his own authority, is also accused of furthering secretly the revolution against the Colombian government. Arms, ammunition and the other accessories of war have been quietly smuggled into Venezuela through the waterways of the republic, and the first engagement is expected to be the signal for uprisings in several widely separated districts.

To add to the seriousness of the situation in Venezuela itself, it is well known that in the adjoining republic of Colombia a very strong feeling of resentment against the Castro government exists on account of what is considered a serious breach of international law on the part of Venezuela for its alleged recognition of, if not actual assistance to, the leaders of the revolutionary party of Colombia.

In consequence of the resignation of Senator Pardo, minister of war, it is feared that President Castro of Venezuela, as proposed to the cabinet, will declare war against Colombia, notwithstanding public opinion is against such a move. The President, it is understood, suggested that passports be handed to the minister from Colombia.

TWO WOMEN LYNCHED.

Betsy McCray, a Negress, and Her Son and Daughter the Victims.

The murder of Mrs. and Mrs. Taliaferro at Charleston, Miss., culminated Thursday night in the lynching of Betsy McCray, her son, Belford McCray, and her daughter, Ida McCray, all colored. The mob was composed of about 600 white citizens of Carroll County, who marched to the jail in order. Demanding the keys from Jailer Duke, they proceeded to the cells of the negroes, bound them by the necks and hands and carried them to the corporate limits of the town, where they hanged them on a tree by the roadside and riddled their bodies with bullets.

The mob paid no heed to Judge Stevens and W. S. Hill, who stood on the steps of the jail and earnestly appealed to the men in the name of law and order. They even followed the mob to the cell doors, with their arms around the necks of the leaders, pleading with them to let the law take its course, but with no effect.

ILLINOIS INCIDENTS.

SOBER OR STARTLING, FAITHFULLY RECORDED.

Peoria Man Fulfills His Own Prediction—Skeleton of Murdered Man Is Found—Kidnaping in Orphan Asylum—Case Against Insurance Company.

Two weeks before, Martin Debrun, of Peoria, predicted that his wife would die on a certain day. That morning he went to her home and killed her. The woman was 41 years of age and had been separated from her husband several months on account of his violent temper and cruelty. He fired four shots at her, all of which took effect, and then, after running about a block, shot himself in the stomach, dying before anyone could reach him. Debrun was always very quarrelsome. Three days before his marriage he whipped the woman he was engaged to and was arrested, but she forgave him. They came to America to live after the wedding. They got along fairly well until a few months ago, when his love for drink, followed by abuse, caused an estrangement. During the interim he called several times to see his five children, ranging in age from 6 to 17 years, but never asked forgiveness, though the neighbors say his wife was willing to make him her slave, but said the word. She caused his arrest July 3 for threatening her life, but afterward relented and refused to prosecute.

Old Crime Comes to Light.
Thirty-three years ago, John Russell, a farmer, living a few miles southeast of Tower Hill, went to Shelbyville, and drew $800 from the Postoffice bank to pay for some land he had purchased. The last seen of Russell was when he was three miles south of Shelbyville on his way home. His horse came home next morning, riderless. About a year ago Joseph Piper, a farmer living in Christian County, went to the Judge of Shelby County and informed him that when a boy he saw Russell's body buried by three men and he could keep the secret no longer. Piper volunteered to direct the sheriff to where he saw the body buried. A search was made in vain, and the matter was dropped. The other day while workmen were tearing down an old house near where Piper claimed he saw Russell buried, the skeleton of a man was found on the floor of the house. Trunkets found near showed the skeleton to be that of Russell. Arrests are being made, several wealthy residents being implicated.

Says Millions Are Hidden.
On a recent morning seventeen lawsuits were filed in Springfield against the Aetna Insurance Company and its agents, and, if allegations are proved, a great tax-dodging scheme will be brought to light. The suits are against several prominent men of Sangamon County who have been acting as agents for the company and a total amount of about $135,000 is involved. H. H. Klayser, a former employee of the Aetna Insurance Company, has for some time been securing evidence against the company and its agents for alleged violation of the insurance laws of the State of Illinois and filed the declarations. He states that he will bring similar suits in the 101 other counties of the State and an amount close to $10,000,000 will be shown to have been covered up during the past fifteen years.

Attempt to Kidnap a Child.
An unsuccessful attempt was made to kidnap a child from the home for the Friendless in Springfield. The plotters were exposed and in a pistol duel which followed one of the kidnapers is supposed to have been seriously wounded, though they all escaped. Three men had gained entrance to the institution and, after discovering the child, Edward Robert, the latter fired two shots at the intruders, who opened a return fire as they ran. The police suspected the child's mother and sister, Lena Richardson and Bertha Barnes, of laying the plot. The Richardson woman and her elder daughter live in Chicago, and once before attempted to gain possession of little Lena.

Charles C. Hackett, an aged veteran and a member of Gen. Grant's old regiment, was waylaid at Oakland by a bully named Mullenix and beaten with a car pin until insensible. His wounds may prove fatal.

Julius Kepke, 17 years of age, was drowned in Rock River at Rockford, by the upsetting of a rowboat. With Kepke were Eddie Haight and John Mann. Haight was the only one who could swim. Mann grasped the boat and clung to it tightly. Haight caught hold of Kepke, who was floundering about almost helpless, and tried to get to the shore with him. The task was a hard one, but Haight stuck to it manfully. He was only a short distance from shore, probably twenty-five feet, when Kepke's clothing became caught on something. He grasped Haight about the neck and fairly pulled him under. Haight was compelled to free himself, and then made a vain effort to rescue his drowning companion. He found he was unable to free the lad, and, worn out himself, made his way to shore. When Kepke's body was dragged to the surface a set line was found fastened to it.

Valentine Miller of West Chicago was tarred and feathered by an enraged mob for beating his wife and was given a ride to the outskirts of the hamlet on the sharp edge of a two-inch scantling. The man was saved from being lynched only by the vigorous work of the cooler headed members of the crowd. Miller came home intoxicated, and after knocking down Mrs. Miller he beat her while she lay on the floor. With the blood on his face from the cuts on his head and in the rain to her neighbors, telling them of her husband's brutality. A posse was organized at once to secure Miller.

Ditch served ten years in the Joliet penitentiary for assaulting a young woman near Pekin.

Mary Siebers was desecrated at the altar in Quincy by Clarence Shields. They were to have been married at 8 o'clock the other morning in St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church. The church was filled with relatives and friends, the priest was ready to perform the ceremony, and Miss Siebers, attired in her bridal robes, was waiting at the altar with her sister as bridesmaid, but Shields failed to appear. The girl's father declares he will kill Shields on sight.

Official announcement of the Illinois commissioners to the Charleston Exposition, provided for by an act of the last General Assembly, was made by Gov. Yates as follows: Col. Frederick H. Smith, Peoria, chairman; Patrick J. Healy, Chicago; Arthur J. Dunbar, Chicago; John H. Updegraff, Sullivan; John S. Brown, Monmouth; Frank E. Kahl, Springfield; Thomas Pippitt, Olney; Hector Durand of Chicago, editor of Du Italia, is named as secretary of the commission.

A scarcity of water led the Kewanee city authorities to notify the Kewanee Mining and Manufacturing Company that it would shut off the water from its ice plant in forty-eight hours. The company appealed to Judge Hiram Bigelow of Galva for an injunction and secured a restraining order. When the bill and answer had been presented to the judge he refused an injunction and the city, acting upon the advice of its attorneys, turned off the water. The opposing lawyers declared this was in contempt of court, as the real hearing had not been had, but only the hearing on the sufficiency of the answer. The city claims the shutting off of the water is necessary in order to protect the fire reserve. The company charges discrimination.

The decomposed bodies of two men were found on the farm of Abraham Buck, two and one-half miles south of Elkhart. One of the bodies was discovered by Mr. Buck's daughter and the other by people who had been attracted to the place by the first grovsmen find. The bodies were about half a mile apart. Miss Buck came upon the first body about 100 yards south of the residence. It was just west of the Chicago and Alton railroad track, which passes the place. No marks of violence were found, and the popular theory is that they died of heat. They were fairly well dressed.

The sum of $2,000 is the price that has been set upon the heads of Richard Hearn of Mattson and his daughter, 13 years of age, in letters that have been received by Mr. Hearn within the last few days. The first letter stated that unless Mr. Hearn deposited $2,000 at a designated point near the Episcopal Church his daughter Maud would be kidnapped. Hearn did not respond to the request, as he considered it a joke. A few days later a second letter was received, this communication being much stronger than the first and threatening to take the daughter and kill her. A few days later a third communication was received, this time the sender threatening to abduct both Mr. Hearn and his daughter, to subject the girl to cruel treatment before her father's eyes, to kill her, and then to kill the father. Hearn, who is a retired farmer of considerable wealth, has no intention of complying with the request, but nevertheless he is worried lest an attempt be made to carry out the threat concerning his daughter.

Official figures compiled at Washington for the last fiscal year show that Illinois retains her rank as the banner internal revenue producing State in the Union. Peter R. Kelley, aged 80, and his wife, four years older, died at Galena within a few hours of each other. They were natives of Ireland and had been residents of Galena for over sixty years.

Mrs. J. E. Williams, wife of the president of the Rockford Bill Posting Company, shot herself through the right temple and died a few hours later. Her mind was temporarily unbalanced from the extreme heat.

AN ARMY SCANDAL.

Captain Strong and Lady Hope Figure in a Sensation.

May Kehoe, the American actress, has at last got rid of her husband, though, paradoxically, she later had by no means been believed of her. As the companion of Putnam Bradlee Strong, son of the late ex-Mayor of New York, she has called to join the lotus eaters in Japan, there to live a life of pleasure, free from the censure and the social ostracism which such a life would invite here.

One life who has already ruined, that of her legal husband, Lord Hope. Another life she seems to be leading along the same pathway, that of Putnam Bradlee Strong. Her infatuation for her was such that she resigned from the army in order to be in her society and only consideration for him on account of his honorable father prevented his being court-martialed. While under orders to sail for the Philippines he telegraphed from San Francisco his resignation as captain to the Secretary of War. Mr. Root would have refused to accept it and would have ordered a court-martial were it not that the President intervened and for the sake of the father saved the son from the consequences of his rashness and fatuity.

The couple were estranged in San Francisco. The leading hotels and restaurants closed their doors in their faces and they were constrained to patronize the cheaper restaurants, and even these were not overpleased with the attention. Finally the pair under assumed names left for Japan.

While the wife of Lord Hope by thus accompanying Strong has abandoned her legal husband the latter, strangely, can take no action to divorce her. The head of the family is his brother, the Duke of Newcastle. He holds the family purse strings and on him is dependent Lord Hope. But the duke is opposed to divorce in any form. And thus May Kehoe legally bears the title of Lady Hope and one day, despite her disgrace, may become a duchess of Newcastle, for her abandoned husband is the legal successor of the present childless duke.

In case Lord Hope should succeed to the dukedom within the next few years it is doubtful if the courts would issue him a decree of divorce. According to numerous precedents they would hold that he had waited too long.

"CORN KING" CLOSES SHOP.

Board of Trade Firm of George H. Phillips & Co. Suspends.

George H. Phillips, the "corn king," about whom has clustered many of the commercial surprises of Chicago recently, furnished another sensation Thursday when he announced through circular letters mailed to his customers that he was forced for the time being to suspend the business of the George H. Phillips Company. The cause of the temporary suspension is attributed to the irregularities on the books of the firm on the celebrated May corn deal, which has gone down in the history of the commercial world as one of the most daring feats of the kind.

A sensation was created on the Board of Trade when it became known that Phillips, who engineered two gigantic deals in May and September corn and who has been regarded as one of the most brilliant young speculators on the board, had transferred his open trades to another firm, and that the books of his company had been placed in the hands of an attorney. Instantly there began to fly about the trading pit rumors that Phillips was in financial straits and that he was unable to swing his holdings.

Old-time speculators have been prophesying ever since Phillips sprung into sudden prominence in the corn pit that it was only a matter of time until the young speculator would meet his Waterloo, and they accepted his action on Thursday as the arrival of the crisis. Phillips, they say, is long on practically all of his holdings—namely, oats, 1,000,000 bushels; corn, 900,000 bushels, and wheat, 400,000 bushels. The company was incorporated in November, 1900, with a capital of $30,000.

RAINS HELP CROPS.

INTENSE HEAT GIVES WAY TO MODERATE TEMPERATURE.

Conditions Are Better—Corn in Iowa Is Not as Much Hurt as Was Supposed—Cotton Is Much Improved, Though Rain Is Needed.

The general summary of the weekly crop report issued by the Agricultural Department is as follows:

Intense heat prevailed during the greater part of the week throughout the central valleys, but the temperatures during the last three days were more moderate. Good rains have fallen over a large part of the drought area in the Mississippi and upper Missouri valleys, but drought conditions have become more anxious in the Ohio valley and Tennessee, where the week has been rainless except in a few localities. In the Atlantic districts the weather conditions have been generally favorable, except over portions of the Carolina and Virginia, where rain is now needed. The conditions were also favorable on the Pacific coast.

Recent rains have improved late corn in portions of Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri, but the early crop was practically ruined before the rains came. In Iowa the crop has sustained less injury than in the before-mentioned States, and the rainfall has been copious and well distributed. In the great corn States east of the Mississippi river, except over northern Illinois, drought and excessive heat have continued with disastrous effects upon corn, which is now in a critical condition. In Michigan and generally throughout the middle Atlantic States and New England the corn crop is in fine condition.

Winter wheat harvest is general on the north Pacific coast, and good yields. Harvesting of spring wheat is well advanced over the southern portion of the spring wheat region, and has begun in the southern Red River valley. Premature opening has reduced the yield and quality of the crop over the southern portion of the spring wheat region, although the thrashing returns show better yields in Iowa than were anticipated. In North Dakota and northern Minnesota the crop has sustained but little injury from heat.

Oat harvest continues in the more northerly sections, having been delayed by rains in Michigan. Reports of premature opening continue from the upper Missouri valley. A light crop is indicated in the middle Atlantic States.

The condition of cotton over the greater part of the cotton belt is improved, good growth and clean fields being generally reported. In Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee and central Texas, however, the crop continues to need rain, and shedding and blooming at top in these States are extensively reported.

In the Ohio valley and Tennessee tobacco continues to suffer from drought, but in Kentucky and Tennessee has withstood the unfavorable conditions well. The apple crop in the central valleys has been further injured by drought and heat and a very light crop is indicated in the middle Atlantic States and New England.

Conditions in Western States.

Illinois—Dry and hot, except in northern section, where good showers helped crops. Corn in central and southern sections, but good rains in three or four days will still be of great benefit; yield will be considerably better than expected in northern sections. In the vicinity of Springfield and south, pollen dry and falling before silk forms. Some fields cannot be harvested; hay, corn and wheat are in poor condition; on the other hand, some fields are in good condition; gardens ruined; potatoes rotting in ground except in north; all crops considerably dry; small streams drying up and stock water scarce; peaches small and apples nearly all fallen; peas good.

Indiana—Hot, dry, sunny weather injured crops. Corn in central and southern sections, but good rains in three or four days will still be of great benefit; yield will be considerably better than expected in northern sections. In the vicinity of Springfield and south, pollen dry and falling before silk forms. Some fields cannot be harvested; hay, corn and wheat are in poor condition; on the other hand, some fields are in good condition; gardens ruined; potatoes rotting in ground except in north; all crops considerably dry; small streams drying up and stock water scarce; peaches small and apples nearly all fallen; peas good.

Ohio—Temperatures excessive; local showers relieved drought in northeastern and southeastern counties; corn benefited where showers fell, but injured somewhat by accompanying high winds; in central and southwest corn much damaged by drought; corn in excellent condition; hay, corn and wheat are in poor condition; on the other hand, some fields are in good condition; gardens ruined; potatoes rotting in ground except in north; all crops considerably dry; small streams drying up and stock water scarce; peaches small and apples nearly all fallen; peas good.

Wisconsin—Drought, which was confined to southern counties, broken by copious rains; corn, tobacco and potatoes in southern section in excellent condition; hay, corn and wheat are in poor condition; on the other hand, some fields are in good condition; gardens ruined; potatoes rotting in ground except in north; all crops considerably dry; small streams drying up and stock water scarce; peaches small and apples nearly all fallen; peas good.

Iowa—Drought broken by copious and well-distributed rains with very beneficial effects; corn in central and southern sections, but good rains in three or four days will still be of great benefit; yield will be considerably better than expected in northern sections. In the vicinity of Springfield and south, pollen dry and falling before silk forms. Some fields cannot be harvested; hay, corn and wheat are in poor condition; on the other hand, some fields are in good condition; gardens ruined; potatoes rotting in ground except in north; all crops considerably dry; small streams drying up and stock water scarce; peaches small and apples nearly all fallen; peas good.

Nebraska—Hot, followed by showers last of week, but in the latter part of week rain fell rapidly; hay light crop except in northern counties, where good; corn has deteriorated, and in most northern sections will yield less than a crop, while in southern counties near feed will make but little more than fodder; apples and peaches dropping early.

Kansas—Cooler last days, with good rains in central and eastern counties; late corn holding fairly well over much of State and much of fourth to fifth crop; potatoes generally well, but rotting in rain districts; plowing for fall wheat begun in few counties, and for late corn in some sections.

ROB SAFE AND ESCAPE.

Your Man Loot Office of Chicago Suburban Railway and Get $700.

Four men, armed with revolvers and carrying with them a quantity of dynamite, entered the offices of the Suburban Railway Company, 22d street and Huron avenue, Chicago, early Monday morning, forced and bound two employees in charge of the place and then secured $700 from the safe, which they blew open with explosives. William Ness and James Bortuch, the two victims, with their arms and legs securely tied and with pieces of cloth stuffed down their throats so they could not utter a sound, were thrown in the coal bin in the rear of the plant. After spending three hours in frantic efforts to release themselves, they were found at 6 o'clock by conductors reporting for duty.

Ness and Bortuch are employed by the company to protect the money which is left in the office over night. Sunday night, after the last conductor had turned in his day's receipts, $700, or probably more, was placed in the large iron box for safe keeping. At about 2 o'clock Ness told his companion that he was going to step outside to get some fresh air. No sooner had he opened the front door than four desperate-looking men, each carrying a revolver in his hand, confronted him. They pushed Ness back into the office at the points of their weapons. At the same time they were closely watching the actions of Bortuch, who was making an effort to escape through a rear door. They soon covered him with their pistols, and threatened to kill both if they made further attempts to free themselves or screamed for assistance.

The quartette of robbers bound and gagged their victims. Then Ness and Bortuch were thrown in the coal bin and ordered to remain there under penalty of death. The robbers then returned to the office to complete their work. One man stood outside as a "lookout," while his companions began operations on the safe. After a half hour had been spent near the combination of the strong box the explosive was used. A second later there was a deafening sound and the door of the safe flew from its hinges. After the large sacks of coin had been exposed the men began to pick up the money that had been scattered over the floor. They filled their pockets and then left as quietly as they had entered.

NEWS FROM OUR COLONIES.

Adulteration of indigo by the natives of the Philippines has almost ruined the export market for this product of the tropics, and has cut the price in half. According to reports received at the War Department, years ago indigo was one of the important products of the islands. In quality the Philippine article compared favorably with the best grade of the Guatemalan product. It used to bring from 61 to 65 cents per pound, but in 1875 the price fell to 23 cents. At present it fluctuates between 30 and 35 cents. The decline in price was brought about by the deterioration in the quality, that resulted in a greatly lessened demand for the product. The cause of this deterioration is explained by the fact that years ago the native growers knew and practiced only the most primitive methods of preparing indigo, but with the arrival of large numbers of Chinese in the Philippines, the original process was abandoned and the natives began to imitate the Chinese practice of adulteration. It was found that by the admixture of a small quantity of lime with the indigo the coloring matter could be precipitated and the product prepared for the market in a much shorter period. While the more rapid process increased the quantity of the product, the effect upon the quality of the indigo was soon discovered by the purchaser, and the Philippine product, owing to its extensive use of lime, fell into discredit in foreign markets.

During a long talk on affairs in the island of Guam, Gov. Tilly recently gave President McKinley some valuable and interesting information. One of the curious facts brought out was that civilization had introduced tuberculosis on the island. Before the advent of the Spaniards, the natives of the island did not suffer from colds and coughs. When it rained he or she sneezed the body with oil of cocoa and the rain had no effect. The native, however, has not learned how to handle the wet shirt or trousers emergency and the American clad native is therefore contracting the diseases consequent on wet clothes dried on the body. The native, moreover, it is said, were woefully ignorant about how to rear babies. The diet never changed when the children were sick. If they had cholera infantum they were dosed with bananas, coconuts or raw sweet potatoes, whichever happened to be in stock. But for all this Gov. Tilly declared people of Guam are a fairly vigorous, tractable and anxious to become good citizens. Gov. Tilly impressed on the President that there were great needs for the islanders for industrial and agricultural education. Their lands were as yet very crude, but they were making progress.

Cuba has a population of about 1,500,000, of whom 900,000 are natives, 142,000 foreigners, 234,000 pure blood negroes, 280,000 mulattoes or half-breeds and 14,000 Chinese. More than 40 per cent are unable to read or write, and having never been subject to tyranny, do not possess the slightest comprehension of the principles of self-government.

The insular government at Manila has saved $250,000 by the passage of an act virtually declaring that one quarter of the Maritimes in the British provinces public domain and authorizing the use of the stone in the harbor improvement. A Spanish company is alleged to have established title to the quarries.

Copper deposits in the province of Lepanto, near Mount Dana, P. I., have been worked by the Igorotes since before the Spanish discovery of the archipelago. These barbarians, who are heathens, living in squalor, have developed industrially to a surprisingly high point, and the skill they exhibit in the extraction and working of metals is extraordinary. They form of copper kettles no less than three and a half feet in diameter, and they also make numerous kinds of implements and ornaments out of the same metal.

Instead of falling off $5,500,000 a month, as was figured would be the result of the reduction of the war-taxes, the receipts for the first month of the fiscal year will be a million dollars more than the corresponding month last year. The first twenty-five days show an increase of $4,024,62 over the receipts for the corresponding period of 1900. In other words, the receipts for the month of July will be nearly four million dollars in excess of the estimates. Each day has shown its increase. For example, the receipts on July 25 a year ago were $913,481.93; for the 25th of the month this year they were $980,002.89. The internal revenue receipts of the month, as shown by the statement compiled July 20, were $23,070,723.71. The receipts for the same period last year were $22,530,700.00. Secretary Gage has looked at these figures and been puzzled by them. Even allowing for a certain falling off, which is regarded as inevitable, it begins to look as if there must be a vastly increased sale of the articles which are the revenue producers. Secretary Gage says it is early yet, and there may be some temporary condition not apparent on the face which is responsible for the stimulation of revenue. He is not willing to admit that his estimate of $40,000,000 reduction is $40,000,000 out of the way. He will not admit it on the basis of a twenty-five days' showing at any rate. The customs receipts for the first twenty-five days of this fiscal year are greater than last year by nearly a million dollars. The month's receipts were $17,303,906.01; for the same period last year, $16,007,011.10. There is always a deficit at this time of the year. Last year the total expenditures were $43,555,000. The war expenditures are the largest item—$14,130,000. Pensions cost this year $10,335,000. The civil and miscellaneous are only $11,360,000.

It is believed by those who have been keeping in close touch with the arrangements for the court of inquiry in the Schley case that a series of sensational will result as the outcome of the investigation. The precept that was issued is considered by the unprejudiced as a bill of indictment found by the Navy Department against Admiral Schley. It is understood pretty generally that jealousy is rampant in the navy. While it is firmly believed that Admiral Schley will be given the hot end of the hearing, notwithstanding the precautions that Secretary Long will throw about the inquiry, there is an undercurrent of opinion that the admiral realizes this, and in view of his speedy retirement from the navy purposes to open up to public gaze all the ins and outs of the naval management in times of peace and war, at home as well as abroad. If there is any truth in the stories of jealousies and improper striving for official preferment that have been bruited about for years past, it is believed that the Schley case will be less aggravated form, it is believed that will be presented by Admiral Schley and his counsel at the court of inquiry in such a manner as will gravely accentuate the fact that has heretofore been intangible yossip.

Up to date something like $4,000,000 have been withdrawn from New York and sent West by money orders. The withdrawals have been as follows: To New Orleans, $2,235,000; to Chicago, $1,300,000; to Cincinnati, $1,000,000; to St. Louis, $225,000. The money has been mostly in currency of small denominations—$20 notes and under. The money sent West thus far is about $700,000 more than was withdrawn at the same period in 1900. Despite the increase in the withdrawal, the Treasury officials have no fear of its consequences on the New York money market, such as occurred last year. It will be recollected that money was taken out of New York at such a rate as to create almost a panic in Wall Street. Nothing of this sort is anticipated now; however, the department having an ample supply of money on hand to meet the demands.

It is estimated that the cost of the Sampson-Schley court of inquiry will be about $25,000. This estimate is based on what Navy Department officials have now in sight, but making allowance for an examination of probably a third more witnesses than are now contemplated the expenses would perhaps be $35,000, or $40,000. Secretary Long and Captain Cowles, Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, expressed the opinion that the inquiry would not be an expensive affair. The opinion of a very high naval official is that not more than a month will be required to thoroughly investigate all the points in issue. Two months, however, would not be too large a margin considering that many new issues may be sprung.

Secretary Long has issued imperative orders prohibiting naval officers publicly discussing the Sampson-Schley controversy. It is the purpose of the Secretary to keep the case out of the newspapers as much as possible until the court of inquiry meets. In Washington there is not much danger of the service being demoralized by the conflicting claims, as nearly all officers about the Navy Department are partisans of Admiral Sampson, and can see only his side. Nevertheless, the Secretary has decided that there has already been too much talking, despite an old order which prohibits officers discussing matters pertaining to the personnel of the navy without first obtaining permission from the department.

On account of timber land frauds discovered in Montana and Idaho, Commissioner Hermann of the general land office has suspended all proofs made during the present year under the timber and stone act pending the completion of the full investigation and inquiry before some time ago. This action applies to all stations where government timber land is purchased and involves thousands of cases. Many of the large companies and speculators, who it is alleged, have had "dummy" agents make purchases of these lands from the government.

Lawn Fete at Bluff Lake.

At L. E. Curtis' cottage, on the south bank of Bluff Lake, a lawn fete was given on Friday evening which was attended by the guests of the various hotels in the vicinity. The decorations were beautiful, the music excellent and the luncheon served by the hostess, Mrs. Curtis, at midnight, was delicious. Miss Curtis and Miss Allen served and an enjoyable evening was afforded all those who were present. The night was an ideal one for the occasion and the beauty of the moon was not rivaled by that of the young ladies present, and many an adolescent swain left affected by the festivities of the evening.

The hours spent there were the pleasantest in many a day.

And such another, perhaps, never may.

A sail on the lake is to follow on Sunday, in Mr. Curtis' yacht. Officers have been appointed and will wear the regulation uniform. It is regretted by all those present that Miss Curtis and Miss Allen leave for Chicago on Sunday evening.

New Music for the Popular Music Lover.

Max S. Witt, whose "First Violin" waltzes, dedicated to Richard Mansfield, had such unprecedented success, has just written a waltz in Spanish rhythm called, "The Belle of Granada." It is already a favorite with orchestra leaders.

"Don't Wear Your Heart On Your Sleeve" is the significant title of a new ballad by the authors of "The Little Lost Child." It is a song which appeals to everyone's sympathies.

"Mazie, My Dusky Daisy," is the latest craze incoon songs. It has a little touch of Spanish melody and rhythm in it and a chorus that everyone catches on to its melody.

"The Bugville Brigade" is an odd characteristic piece for piano by Nick Brown. Everyone likes this odd kind of a solo piece which, while easy of performance, is at once effective and easy.

Williams & Walker have got really a "crackerjack" hit in their show this season. It is called when "Zacharias Lends The Band," and it has a very catchy melody indeed.

The above publications are issued by Jos. W. Storn & Co., the "House of Hits" who are also agents for the celebrated Hawkes Sonorous Band Instruments and the Bear Stringed Instruments. They will be pleased to send their illustrated catalogue free, upon application to their main office, 34 E. 21st Street, New York.

Face Powder.

A pure face powder will do no harm, but it should be dusted on lightly and well washed out of the skin at night. It is advisable to apply an invisible cold cream first, then wipe off the surplus before using powder. This serves to protect the skin and furnishes a slightly adhesive surface for the powder.—New York Ledger Monthly.

Northern Wisconsin Railroad Lands

are increasing in value from year to year. Railroads are the great civilizers, for they give the settler as well as the manufacturer equal opportunity to work in undeveloped fields, thereby rapidly settling the country and brings forth its undiscovered riches. Northern Wisconsin is rich in iron ore, clay, kaolin, marl, timber and fine farm lands. It has made many a settler independent and added to the wealth of manufacturers who have sought this territory. Opportunities have not passed, as there is still a generous supply of land which can be obtained at low figures and on easy terms.

PERVIN SYNUR CO.

Dear Sirs:—I feel it my duty to write to you and let you know how much good your medicine has done for me. Twenty-three years ago I was taken with some kind of stomach trouble and I tried everything I heard of. They did me but little good. Three years ago neuralgia set in on me and I got so poor and weak that I could hardly walk—couldn't work any. My husband received a book through the mail, advertising your medicine, and he sent our little boy to the drug store to get one of your ten-cent bottles. I began to use it. It is strange to say, but it's the truth, the second dose I took gave me lots of relief. I kept on using it till I used it nearly one year and now I am nearly as strong as I used to be and can do any kind of work. I recommend it to all, for it seems to me it would cure anybody. I have gotten several to use Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and they all say it has done them so much good. God bless Dr. Caldwell and his medicine for doing me so much good.

Yours with respect,

MRS. ISABELL WHEELER.

Steelhead Salmon in Superior.

Four years ago the United States fish commission began to plant in Lake Superior the steelhead salmon of the Pacific. It was believed that this salt-water fish would thrive in the cold, fresh waters of the great lake, and fish of this kind weighing five pounds have recently been caught. As modified in the lake they are well-shaped, firm, with flesh of a fine red and delicate flavor. The planting will proceed rapidly.

Bids

will be received for a remedy that is equal to Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. For particulars ask W. T. Hill.
